

OL's new master - Hutchinson News, The (KS) - March 1, 2011

March 1, 2011 | Hutchinson News, The (KS)

Once the flagship of Internet services, AOL now occupies the corner booth in the Internet flea market. In an attempt to revive its fall from the stars, AOL has purchased the Huffington Post and anointed Arianna Huffington, co-founder of the Huffington Post, president and editor-in-chief of the new and improved AOL.

What's that, you say? "Forgive them, for they know not what they do." Aha, but there is silver to be made by joining the "dark side" and it doesn't get any darker than the loony-left Huffington Post. "Hmm, do I smell George Soros lurking somewhere behind this?"

It would appear AOL has sold themselves to a new master to pump up the bank account, at the expense of their souls, a perfect example of unbridled capitalism lacking a shred of moral fiber.

GREGORY H. BONT RAGER Hutchinson

Copyright (c) 2011, The Hutchinson Publishing Co.